

General Practitioners with Extended Roles

General Practitioners with Extended Roles (GPwER) while usually affiliated to a local dermatology department work without direct consultant supervision. The recommended level of training for a GPwER is currently 1-2 years of appropriate experience in secondary care dermatology or equivalent and evidence of recognised training via courses, qualifications or a portfolio. It is likely that accreditation for this intermediate level of care delivery will become formalised in the near future with a formal curriculum and assessment methods.
